

THE BREAD & BUTTER ISSUE

ISSUE No. 4-2018

$8.00 SINGLE ISSUE PRICE

IN THIS ISSUE:

EDITORIAL: BECOMING A SQUEAKY WHEEL, p. 4

PUBLIC HEALTH NUTRITION CONFERENCE, p. 5

A SHORT HISTORY OF FAT CONSUMPTION IN CANADA, p. 6

THE SKINNY ON DIETARY FATS and OILS, p. 8

FOOD BY NUMB3RS, p. 15

CHECK THE LEAD OUT, GET THE LEAD OUT, p. 16

THE WHOLE TRUTH ABOUT WHOLE GRAINS, p. 18

TO HEALTH CANADA ABOUT NUTRITION LABELS, p. 20

OPEN LETTER TO THE CBC (Round Two), p. 27

FAST FOOD FACE OFF: Back cover

BECOMING A SQUEAKY WHEEL

IN THE MID-1990s, a former employer (a telecom watchdog) helped give public voice to consumer grievances against a cable

TV company that automatically charged basic cable TV customers for extra channels unless the customer pro-actively declined. (This is a practice called “negative option billing.”) Customers saw this as a government-endorsed rip-off and rebelled, the company backed off, and the regulator tightened its grip. But some wondered if messing with people’s TV was an embarrassingly rare and potent trigger for activism.

Years later, while I was meeting with an MP about food law reform, his assistant poked his head into the room to report receiving the 40th contact from constituents urging him to vote in favour of an unrelated resolution in the House of Commons. The MP changed his mind on the spot, surprising me that so few voices could be so influential. Anthropologist Margaret Mead’s reflection that only “a small group of thoughtful, committed citizens can change the world” met proof of concept.

In 2000, comedian Rick Mercer launched an online petition calling for a federal referendum to change Canadian Alliance Party leader Stockwell Day’s name to Doris Day. Mercer ranted about Day’s proposal to allow fringe political views to spur $150 million referendum votes.

Mercer’s one million weekly viewers helped spread the word to one million endorsers (3% of eligible voters) within weeks, a high-water mark for spontaneous displays of political activism in Canada. Doubtless, some endorsers had ticklish funny bones and nothing more.

But, of the 541 petitions submitted to the House of Commons since Parliament first officially recognized online petitions in 2016 (in addition to paper), none has come close to Mercer’s following. Only one exceeded (barely) 10% of Mercer’s million (this time proposing electoral reform, not opposing it).

That is the past.

This spring, Health Canada proposed regulations to mandate “warnings” on labels of foods high in sodium, saturated fat, or sugar, nutrients responsible for less than 20% of nutrition-related deaths. The proposed rules will still let food companies make misleading nutrition marketing claims, and lock in confusing labels for 15 years. (See pages 20-25.)

If all Food for Life Report readers—let alone the estimated 68% of all Canadians who support front-of-pack nutrition labelling—insisted to their MPs and the Minister of Health (not just pollsters), this might provoke effective label changes, not just confusing rules that are least offensive to food companies. If just 1% of the 70% of Manitobans that support a national school meals program (according to last year’s Manitoba Food Matters poll) called their 14 MPs and 57 MLAs, those 9,000 phone calls could hasten tipping points in Winnipeg and Ottawa legislatures.

American peace activist Marianne Williams wrote “Our greatest fear is not that we are inadequate, but that we are powerful beyond measure.” Let’s learn how to help Canadians come out of their shells to become more powerful champions of public health.

Bill Jeffery, BA, LLB, Editor

EXPERT ADVISORY BOARD

Mary L'Abbé, PhD
University of Toronto

Kevin Banks, SJD, LLB, BA
Centre for Law in the Contemporary Workplace
Queen's University

Jennifer Black, PhD, MS, RD
University of British Columbia

Norm Campbell, CM, MD, FRCPC
University of Calgary

Charlene Elliott, PhD
University of Calgary

Amandine Garde, PhD
University of Liverpool Law School
United Kingdom

Sara F. L. Kirk, PhD
Dalhousie University

Catherine L. Mah, MD, PhD
Dalhousie University

Mary McKenna, PhD
University of New Brunswick

Andrew Pipe, CM, MD
University of Ottawa Heart Institute

Kim Raine, PhD, RD
University of Alberta

Mike Rayner, BA, DPhil
University of Oxford, United Kingdom

SUBSCRIPTIONS

Subscribe to Food for Life Report for one year (6 issues) for $39 (plus shipping) on-line at:

www.HealthScienceAndLaw.ca

Subscribe by mail for $45 (including shipping and handling) by writing to:

Food for Life Report

c/o Centre for Health Science and Law
700-1 One Rideau Street
Ottawa, ON K1N 8S7

Your mailing label displays the expiry date of your subscription.

Return undeliverable mail to this address.

For bulk subscriptions or volume electronic subscriptions for professional counselling settings or workplace wellness programs, please contact:

CIRCULATION@HealthScienceAndLaw.ca

Publication Mail Agreement No. 4324-3513

Library of Canada ISSN: 2371-5995